IMPACT

Together with excellence, creating an impact has been one of the guiding principles of EAE Business School since its inception.

In a context of economic frailty, demonstrating a tangible and measurable impact is essential. The EAE and its extended community is characterised by a focus on results and on achieving long-lasting impact in the way it approaches and manages innovation. It is therefore critical that the community demonstrates substantial impact at the socioeconomic level over time, and significant progress towards achieving its mission and objectives.

As per the EU guidelines, the Knowledge and Innovation Community (KIC) should harvest intellectual, human, material, and financial resources to create valuable outputs such as innovation communities, high quality curricula, startups, innovative products, services, technologies, through which it develops and sustains value-added business, enhances competencies necessary for innovation and entrepreneurship, and for developing solutions to major societal challenges.

A KIC is expected to create the following impacts:

- Technological/economic/innovation impact by influencing the creation and growth of businesses, as well as the development of new, innovative solutions to address global challenges, creating both direct and indirect jobs and mobilising additional public and private investments.
- Scientific and educational impact by strengthening human capital in research and innovation, enhancing innovative and entrepreneurial skills both at individual and organisational levels, and fostering the creation and diffusion of knowledge and innovation openly within society.
- Societal impact, including the impact derived by the delivery of systematic solutions within and beyond the EAE Community, also through Cross-community activities, by addressing EU policy priorities in the Cultural and Creative Sectors and Industries (CCSI) through innovative solutions, engagement with citizens and end-users and by strengthening the uptake of innovative solutions in these areas in society.
